

The foam tastes so bad that the predator won't do it again. Color doesn't offer enough protection for some other animals. They have different defenses that help them survive in the wild. (25) Many fish live in groups or schools. That's because there is safety in numbers. At the first sign of trouble, schooling fish swim as close together as they can get. Then the school of fish makes lots of twists and turns. All that movement makes it hard for predators to see individuals in a large group.

23. What is the speaker mainly talking about? C)
24. What protects the sea dragon from a meat-eater's attack? B)
25. According to the passage, why do many fish stay in groups? A)

Happiness Is an Attitude

As is described in the picture, the father is telling his son the secret to happiness is learning how to enjoy being miserable. I cannot agree with him more.

In my eyes, happiness is an attitude. If you are lucky to have a happy life, please cherish it and feel grateful, because taking it for granted will take happiness far away from you. If you are miserable, you should even more hold a positive attitude, because that's the case for the most journey of our life. As the Chinese saying goes, Take pleasure in hardship, which just extols such an optimistic attitude. Having learned to enjoy the miseries, you can definitely be a happy man.

To be brief, in order to get happiness, you have to learn how to enjoy your life, no matter it is a fairy tale or a nightmare.

Part IV Translation

Fan Zhongyan was very diligent in reading when he was young, and he often read all night through in the light. Although he was born in a poor family, the restraint of life did not shake his will to learn. He tried to seek the pleasure of life in books. At the age of 23, he went to Yingtianfu Academy, one of the four famous academies of Song Dynasty, where he worked with established scholars and exchanged ideas with his fellow classmates. He had read a large portion of the Academy's rich collection, as a result of which he greatly extended his breadth of vision. His learning life at the Academy paved the road along which he eventually became an erudite scholar. He was not only an expert on the classics of Confucianism, but also well versed in the craft of poetry and prose writing.

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

(1) French investigators say they are opening a fresh inquiry into the case of the German Wing's co-pilot, who deliberately crashed a plane in the French Alps. French prosecutors said a new investigation into the German Wing's air disaster would decide whether manslaughter charges will be brought. (2) It follows confirmation that some doctors, who treated Andreas Lubitz, judged him unfit to fly, but failed to alert his employers, because of patient confidentiality laws.

"He was taking antidepressants, and he had been on sick leave for ten days. And some of the doctors found that he was very down, very unsure of himself, and tense. And some of them believed that he was not apt to fly." The French Prosecutor, Brice Robin said.

Andreas Lubitz told doctors that he was only sleeping two hours at night and feared he was going blind. All one hundred and fifty people on board the plane were killed.

1. What is the news report mainly about? B)
2. Why didn't doctors alert the co-pilot's employers? C)

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

(3) At the annual Mobile World Congress in Barcelona, the smartphone is king.

The smartphone is getting more powerful, more connected to all the things you might have at home or with you. So, move over home computer—smartphones are taking the lead in allowing us to control the Internet of Things, or IOT for short.

(4) IOT, it's a buzz word, but what it really means is your smartphone becomes the center of not only your mobile life on the go, but of everything within your home. And the number of those smartphone-connected devices is rising, from electric toothbrushes to home robots equipped with cameras, lasers and a range of sensors. Another area seeing improvements is smartphone cameras. Some are capable of changing focal length, while others keep the image sharp at all times or offer 360-degree vision.

3. What is king at the annual Mobile World Congress? A)
4. What does IOT really mean? C)

Questions 5 to 7 will be based on the following news item.

The head of Russia's Anti-doping (反兴奋剂) Laboratory Grigory Rodchenkov has resigned a day after a report by the World Anti-doping Agency accused Russia of widespread cheating in athletics. (5) Russia's Sports Minister said Mr. Rodchenkov was standing down to take all negativity away with him.

(6) Speaking to the BBC, the head of Russia's Athletics Federation Mihayev Gudolf acknowledged there was a problem but it was what he called a mentality problem at coaching level.

“We know our problem. We know our problem with doping. And of course we should change mentality of many coaches, especially coaches in the regions. We started in April. (7)We organized some educational programs. We met with a lot of coaches, with a lot of athletes. It’s impossible to do immediately, to change immediately. But we started to do it.”

The former head of World Athletics Lamine Diack who’s been investigated in France over allegations(指控) of corruption and money laundering has been provisionally suspended by the international Olympics Committee. He was an honorary member.

● Conversation One

M: Good morning. Thanks for being on time.

W: Good morning, Frank.

M: We’ve got a whole bunch of topics to go over today, but let’s start with a simple one: our company’s dress code.

W: We have a dress code?

M: Well... if we didn’t have one before, I’m instituting one. Let’s start now.

W: What exactly does this mean?

M: (8)I’ve become concerned that we are getting a bit too casual. I was walking through the office the other day and some people were wearing shorts and T-shirts! I don’t think they are appropriate office wear. (9)Our standards have been going down. It used to be that we wore casual clothes only on Fridays, but these days it seems we do it almost every day.

W: But Frank, don’t you think maybe this isn’t such a big issue? I mean, why does it matter what we are wearing? I think productivity is more important!

M: Actually, I agree with you. Productivity is the most important thing. (10)But I think what we wear is linked to productivity.

W: In what way are they linked?

M: Police officers wear uniforms, right? It’s a symbol to both them and the public that they are serious about what they do.

W: You’re the boss, Frank, so of course it’s your call... but I have to say, I’m not so keen on this idea. I think neckties cut off blood circulation. I’m much more in favor of a relaxed workplace environment. (11)And for some companies a relaxed atmosphere might work. At Google they let you bring your dog to work!

M: But we are a serious financial company with an image to uphold.

8. What's the man's concern about the office wear in his company? A)

9. What was the standard of wearing before? C)

10. How does the man explain the importance of office wear? B)

11. Why are the staff in Google allowed to bring a dog to work? D)

● Conversation Two

W: (12) Good evening. Welcome to our program, Jack.

M: Thanks.

W: (12) How long have you been a police officer?

M: (15) Thirty years. I've done different types of assignments on the police force, from patrol to undercover work to detective work, and I'm supervising investigations now.

W: Is being a police officer stressful?

M: Yes, definitely. But it depends on your assignment.

W: (13) Which assignment is most stressful in your opinion?

M: (13) Patrol.

W: Oh, really? But why?

M: Because the biggest part of the stress is the fear factor—the fear of the unknown.

W: What do you mean by “the fear of the unknown”?

M: Well, in patrol work, you don't know from moment to moment who you are talking to or what their reaction is going to be to justify your presence. For example, if a patrol officer stops someone for a traffic violation, the driver may try to escape or even back over the officer. So, that's really a very dangerous job and full of risks.

W: I see. It's a risky job and you have to protect yourself all the time.

M: (14) Thus all police officers are taught from the very beginning to be aware of their surroundings. People back over them, shoot them, or jump out at them—all kinds of things. That's a lot of pressure.

W: I see. Well, Jack, thank you for coming to our program and sharing your work with us.

M: You're welcome.

12. What's the relationship between the two speakers? D)

13. What kind of assignment is most stressful according to Jack? B)

14. What is taught to police officers from the very beginning? C)

15. What can we infer about Jack? A)

Passage One

(16) Jean Francis Grander was perhaps the most daring man who ever lived and perhaps the craziest. His greatest desire was to entertain and amaze people. He measured his success by the number of people who fainted dead away after witnessing his death-defying feats. Grander, a blond Frenchman, toured North America in 1850, billing himself as “Blondin.” (17) Blondin’s gift was excellent balance. This talent, coupled with a great desire to surprise and shock his audiences, made Blondin an incomparable performer. His most famous feat was walking across Niagara Falls on a tightrope. Blondin’s “stage” consisted of a rope tied 1 100 feet across the falls. The rope hung some 160 feet above the rocks and boiling water below the falls. Simply walking across the falls was not exciting enough for Blondin; he later had to ride across on a bicycle. Then, in another performance, he calmly walked across blindfolded. At still another time, he carried his terrified manager on his back and walked over the falls before thousands of breathless audience members. (18) Blondin was undoubtedly his own worst critic. He was never satisfied with his act and always tried to attract his audience with his balancing feat. Blondin became so famous on his tour through North America that his last performance was attended by the Prince of Wales.

16. Why was Grander regarded as the craziest man in the world? A)
17. What was Blondin’s talent? B)
18. What did Blondin think of his performance? B)

Passage Two

Listening to a radio program in a foreign language is difficult for many of us. It calls for different skills. Some people have a natural ability to learn language quickly while others have to study for a long time. (19) However, everyone can improve listening skills with practice. We are good listeners in our own language because we have had years of practice. We know what to expect in almost any situation because we have heard similar conversations many times before. Unfortunately, this is not true with a foreign language. We have to listen really hard and we must try not to let the style of our own language affect our learning of the foreign language. (20) Listening to a radio program in a foreign language is easier if we know something about the subject already. The name of the program will usually tell us what the subject is. But sometimes, we should try guessing. (21) Morning programs usually have many short items of news or information. These are good to listen to because we often do not have the time or energy to listen to those detailed ones in the evening. We could also listen to the weather reports, as they are usually short and sweet. Last but not least, try to listen to a foreign radio program every day—(22) a little bit of practice every day is better than a lot all at once!

19. How could we improve listening skills according to the speaker? A)
20. What can make the listening of a radio program easier? C)

21. Why are morning programs suitable for practice? D)
22. What is the advice given by the speaker on practice? B)

● Passage Three

What is your favorite color? Do you like yellow, orange, or red? If you do, you must be an optimist, a leader, or an active person who enjoys life. (23) Do you prefer grey and blue? Then you are probably quiet, shy and you would rather follow than lead. If you love green, you are strong-minded and determined. You wish to succeed and want other people to see you are successful. At least this is what psychologists tell us, and they should know, because they have been seriously studying the connection between color preference and personality, as well as the effect that colors have on human beings. (24) They tell us that we don't choose our favorite color as we grow up. If you happen to love brown, you did so as soon as you opened your eyes, or at least as soon as you could see clearly. Remember, then, that if you feel low, you can always brighten your day or your life with a new shirt or a few colorful things. Remember also that you will know your friends and your enemies better when you find out what colors they like and dislike. And don't forget that anyone can guess a lot about your character when you choose a piece of handkerchief. (25) All in all, color does influence our life and study.

23. What color might a quiet person prefer? B)
24. What can be inferred about color preference? C)
25. What do we know about color and our life? B)

The Importance of Compliments

Compliments are necessary in our life as they encourage people and warm their hearts. They have such a tremendous effect that Mark Twain even remarked, "I can live for two months on a good compliment."

As far as I am concerned, compliments are essential to our life for the following three reasons. Firstly, compliments from others build our confidence and inspire our potentials. Here is a story to illustrate this point. There was a child who was often scorned by others for he was slow in study. But his mother never stopped giving him compliments. Little by little, he built up confidence, made much progress and finally entered a famous university. Secondly, compliments in our daily life bring us harmony and happiness. Receiving compliments makes us more confident and become friendly to the givers. What's more, the significance of compliments has also been proved by psychological studies, which show that compliments to the soul is like water to the body.

Good compliments can help us to win people's hearts, promote friendships, and improve our life. So be generous to give your heartfelt compliments to the people around you!
